CHILDREN'S FUR-LINE MANTLES

MANTLES, we may say, will be as elegant as ever, whether made of fur or cloth. The latter are especially general and will be light-tinting at the back. They are, of course, made suitable for the present style of costume, and are full at the back and open at the side, so that the shape of the lower part of the shapes are opened at the side to afford the necessary room for the arms.

For young ladies there is sure to be a large demand for the short Macintosh, and for children's dresses, which are made as those are well lined and padded, they will be found really useful garments for the season.

The establishment of an overland route to Manly and Sydney, is a project which has now acquired the character of a serious and well-considered scheme, and is being carried out with a view to a more complete fulfilment at an early date than has hitherto been possible. Under the present conditions, the overland route to Sydney is something of a task, a journey full of difficulties. Many of the roads are so bad that only a horse and a driver of the supreme beauty of the surrounding scenery. The journey from the City to the first day takes place at the ferry, via the Murrumbidgee, and then on to the City. The route is a long one, and the horse has to face the long trip at the other end. The route is a long one, and the horse has to face the long trip at the other end. The route is a long one, and the horse has to face the long trip at the other end.

But that he had treated the subject humorously. Of course Sir William Manning had lines to suffer humorously, but he was not a comedian. He was a man of letters, to detract from the serious value of his personal address, and he is right. It is too much the fashion in this day for our speakers to deliver their essays and their subjects over to the people for their amusement. And the fashion is certainly doing some harm. It is a pity that Sir William Manning should have been drawing the line only at his Com. Education speech. It is not for the Chancellor of the University to mention the apostrophe of his audience with the people, but un-actively to light a path for the pupil or the friend of an orator.

I am grieved to think that the Chancellor had to confess that there was a skeleton in the cupboard. That skeleton was the Medical School. But after saying very carefully the words of the Chancellor's address, I ask: Who is responsible for the Medical School? Is it for as an answer for the Chancellor's references sent through the address, Parliament, and not the Senate is the culprit according to Sir William Manning. This Medical School promises to eat up the best part of the University's endowments, if it is to be properly supplied with professors, lecturers, and students. For as an answer for the Chancellor's last year, some of whom have yet graduated, and 17 have been added this year. The Chancellor does not tell us what is the present annual cost of this school; but he writes as a note for information on that point by several very notorious hints, from which everybody can see the enormous charges. He says that in relation to the number of students in the resources of the University. Indeed he says that if this Medical School is to be maintained it should be a special Parliamentary banting, felt by a special Parliamentary endowment. Otherwise the Medical School will exhaust the income of the University, and the University will be a prodigious hange, and the other faculties will starve. But what puzzles me at the present moment is how Parliament could have brought this Frankenstein into existence, unless the University Senate had applied for large special grants of money for that purpose. I imagine that the money thought to be necessary for these special endowments was given to the Senate for the purpose of establishing a Law School, which did it injure on the University the damnable hereditas of a Medical School? No Government ever established a medical school for the purpose of training them without, not even for the purpose of training them without kindness. I know much of the Senate and nobles, but the Senate, are responsible for the Medical School and for the Law School also. But Sir William Manning ought to know best.

The light flared up last evening on a pretty full representation of the constituents of the country, and things went slowly for awhile. The interwoven souls of Messrs. Walker and Melville sprang a mine of questions upon somebody or other. Mr. Walker was exercised about the Chinese Commissioners. He was desirous to know what comparative consideration was given to the Chinese, accredited from the Emperor of China, or whether they were here in the interest of Chinese merchants. It is well that imperialistic eyes are turned into the dark places to discover the evil is thereof. What could the country do without the

of a Medical School? No Government ever emanated gifts on educational or any other institution, not even for the purpose of killing them without reason. I feel much that the Senate and nobles of the Senate, and responsible for the Medical School and for the Law School also. But Sir William Manning ought to know best.

IN THE HOUSE.

The light flared up last evening on a pretty full representation of the constituencies of the country, and things went slowly for awhile. The interested persons of Messrs. Walker and Mettelle sprang a mine of questions upon Messrs. or other. Mr. Walker was criticised about the Chinese Commissioners. He was desirous to know whether these magnates came properly accredited from the Emperor of China, or whether they were here in the interest of Chinese merchants. It was well that inquisitorial eyes are turned into the dark places to discover the truth, but that could not detain us within the jurisdiction box of Parliament? At 5.35, with a preliminary bronchial announcement, Mr. Fletcher began a speech in favour of the payment of members. He did not desire the payment of members in this, but in future Parliament, letting the ballot-box decide it. He was entirely of the opinion that the country would benefit by their being recompensed for their expenses, much that many good men would be elected who could not afford to enter now. Sir Henry Parkes said he had always been opposed to payment of members, and he was opposed to it still. Mr. Lyne favoured the spirit of Mr. Fletcher's motion, and Mr. McElhone spoke very strongly in that direction also. Mr. McElhone dropped the subject of the payment of members after a few expostulations. He thought that more able young men would enter Parliament if they were paid. He did not believe in old men learning the trade of politics. Further, he was firm in the conviction that the other colonies had better be Parliamentarians, and they were paid. "Poverty should be no bar to men entering Parliament," Mr. McElhone said, and that was true. The Minister of Education made Alfred Allen's legislative body stood up. With libellous quotations and spasms of prostration Mr. Allen roared wildly through a ten minutes' speech. He saw his dear head in danger of being the prey of the lawyers; and here he brought in something about "Woe unto you, Lawyers, Scribes, and Pharisees," &c. He saw his beloved working-men dropping one by one into the sea, and that was the Minister's last words. A fearful emphasis he insisted on the elevation of

IN THE HOUSE.

The light flared up last evening on a pretty full representation of the constituents of the country, and some went slowly for awhile. The interest was considerable. Mr. Walker stood up first to give notice upon somebody or other. Mr. Walker was exercised about the Chinese Commissioners. He was desirous to know whether these magnate came properly accredited from the Emperor of China; or whether they were here in the interests of Chinese merchants. It is well that inquisitorial eyes are turned into the work place of our colonies. Yet many would like the country to do without the great question box of Parliament? At 5.35, with a preliminary bronchial announcement, Mr. Fletcher began a speech in favour of the payment of members. He did not desire the payment of members in this, but in future Parliaments, setting the ballot-box aside it. He was entirely of the opinion that the country would be benefited by their being recompensed for their expenses inasmuch that many good men would be elected who could not afford to enter now. Sir Henry Parkes said he had always been opposed to payment of members, and he was opposed to it still. Mr. Lyne favoured the spirit of Mr. Fletcher's motion, and Mr. McKillops spoke very strongly against it. Mr. McEldowney gave some bits of wisdom in the course of his wordy prognostications. He thought that more able young men would enter Parliament if they were paid. He did not believe in old men learning the trade of politics. Further, he was firm in the conviction that the other colonies had better be Parliamentary, and they were so, the country should be none the less. Yes, said Mr. Parliament," Mr. McKillops said finally, and then sat down; and Mr. Minister called Alfred Allen's legislative body stood up. With Ribald quotations and spasms of propher Mr. Allen careered wildly through a ten minutes' speech. He saw his head land in danger of becoming the prey of the lawyers; and hence he brought in something about McGowan and the Ministry and the Opposition. Yet his belief was working man dropping one by one into the rapacious maw of the legal crocodile. With fearful emphasis he insisted on the elevation of the honest toilers into legislators, and how could it be done unless they were paid! He patted Sir Henry on the back, and then after pouring a pot of unctious on his own head retired to the sanctuary of his ruminating intelligence.

After tea Mr. Garvan picked up the thread of opposition to the beer duty, and carried it on. He called it among other things, an "unfair, unsound and outrageous principle." He believed the brewers should be as fairly and properly taxed as the grocers, and the wine merchants were excluded, and the brewers were the target of a darkened system of legislation. Were not the brewers as good a class of men morally and socially as the merchants? Mr. Garvan concluded that they were, and why, then, should they be singled out to bear the burden of taxation? While Mr. Garvan talked, the members of the Ministry sat silent, failed to say anything, and occasionally pulled their faces into ugly grimaces. Then he rose again, and delivered up the arguments of the speaker. There were only four of the Opposition present at a quarter past 8 o'clock, when Mr. Garvan was to the thick of his protestations. After him came the Treasurer, flushed, and explosive in phrase, to prove that the brewers were really having a good time, and that the tax was fair. He made no mention of the past, but to the stupid legislator there that would be still, with the tax on, "enormous differential rates" in favour of the brewer. Mr. Burness could not understand how protectionists could vote against the law. However, when they came to division at 8.35 a dozen or so protectionists did vote against it, while the Ministerials voted in majority. Mr. Lyne shouted "hooray!" as he fell off his chair, and Mr. McKillops followed. He was as fallow rich, and as snug, as of meat, and insist on division several times where there was no earthly reason except "cussedness" for it.

At five minutes to 9 Mr. Hasall, with a seriousness in his manner that foreboded worse than the results warranted moved the motion for adjournment. His grievance was that the local land boards had been entirely ignored by the Minister for Lands and his judgments set aside. With some little heat Mr. Hasall advocated redress. The Minister for Lands was very much taken aback by surprise and indignation. He asked what night, but the Government would tolerate full and free discussion, if due notice were given. Mr. Lyne was a little bit cantankerous. He thought that Mr. Garvan sought to deal with the matter at once if he understood the subject, and if he did not he ought to. But Mr. McKillops was a most cantankerous as Mr. Lyne was. He followed him close, but found that Mr. McKillops followed and thought it hard to understand why men who had helped the bill of '84 through parliament now opposed its totin and nail. Mr. McKillops asked, though, what was the good of having a land board, costing £80,000 a year, if all their appliances tion, not even for the purpose of killing them with kindness. For the purpose of a Medical School, ought to know best.

IN THE HOUSE.

The light flared up last evening on a pretty full representation of the constituents of the country, and things were going on as well as could be expected of Messrs. Walker and Melville spring a mine of questions upon somebody or other. Mr. Walker was exercised about the Chinese Commissioners. He was desirous to know whether these magnates came properly accredited from the Emperor of China, or whether they were here in the interests of Chinese agents, for a while the Emperor's agents were turned into the dark places to discover the evil they wrought. What could the country do without the great question box of Parliament? At 5.35, with a preliminary bronchial announcement, Mr. Fletcher began a speech in favour of the payment of members. He did not desire the payment of members at this time, but in future. "Parliament letting the ballot-box decide it. He was entirely of the opinion that the country would benefit by their being recompensed for their expenses inasmuch that many good men would be deterred who could not afford to enter now. Sir Henry Parkes said he had always been opposed to payment of members, but he was still of the same mind. Mr. Lyne, under the spirit of Mr. Fletcher's motion, and Mr. McElhonne spoke very strongly in that direction also. Mr.
McElhonne dropped some bits of wisdom in the course of his wrothy perorations. He thought that more able young men would enter Parliament if they were paid. He did not think the payment of members the wisest thing. Further, he was firm in the conviction that the other colonies had better Parliamentarians, and they were paid. "Poverty should be no bar to men entering Parliament." Mr. McElhonne said finally, and then sat down; and from the Minister alluded Alfred Alfred's legislative body stood up. With him led questions and answers of 15 minutes. The speaker trifled through ten minutes' speech. He saw his dead land in danger of being the prey of the lawyers; and hence he brought in something about "Woe unto you, Lawyers, Scribes, and Pharisees," &c. He saw his beloved workmen men dropping one by one into the ravine of the laws of the legal crocodile.
With fearful cries and screams of "O God, have mercy on the lawless and the lawless," he said that the lawless would not legislate, and how could it be done unless they were paid! He patted Sir Henry on the back, and then after pouring a pot ofunction on his own head retired to the sanctuary of his ruminating intelligence.

After tea Mr. Garraun picked up the thread of opposition to the beer duty, and carried it on. He called it among other things, an "unfair, unbound and unravenous principle." He believed the brewers should be as fairly and properly taxed as the merchants.
Yet the merchants were coddled, and the brewers were the target of the "damned system" of legislation. He did not believe as good a class of men morally and socially as the merchants. Mr. Garraun concluded that they were, and why, then, should they be singled out to bear the burden of taxation? While Mr. Garraun talked, the members of the Ministry sat with folded arms, yawning. Occasionally they pulled themselves up to listen to a new point, and looked up at the opposition of the speaker. There were only four of the Opposition present at a quarter-past 8 o'clock, when Mr. Garraun was to the thick of his protestations.
After him came the Treasurer, flushed, and explosive in voice, to prove that the brewers were really having a good time of it. Had not the Treasurer said he was in good-humour, and the stupid legal that there would be, with the tax on, "enormous differential rates" in favour of the brewer. Mr. Burness could not understand how protectionists could vote against the tax. However, when they came to division at 8.45 a dozen or so protectionists did vote against it.
While the Ministerialists did vote for a majority. Mr.
Garraun was in good-humour, and the stupid legal humour! He was as full of interjections as a pig of meat, and insisted on division several times when there was no earthly reason except "cussiness" for it.

* * *

At five minutes to 9 Mr. Hassall, with a seriousness in his manner that foreboded more than the results warranted, moved the motion for adjournment.
His grievance was that the local land boards had been entirely ignored by the Minister for Lands and their judgments set aside. With some little heat Mr. Hassall advocated that the Government should take notice of the matter which he said was a surprise. He would not reply last night, but said the Government would facilitate full and free discussion, if due notice were given. Mr. Lyne was a little bit cantantious. He thought that Mr. Garraun ought to be with the matter at once if he dared to do the subject and if it did not suit him. He said their opinions were set aside as contemptuous as Mr. Lyne, and asked him some funny questions. Mr. McElhonne followed and found it hard to understand why men who had helped the bill of '84 through now opposed it tooth and nail. Mr. McElhonne asked, though what was the good of having the bill set aside, costing £90,000 a year. He said their opinions were set aside with such complacency by the Minister for Lands. A very free lance in Mr.
McElhonne. No one has him. He simply wants to fight, and it makes no difference who it is—Jew, Greek, Infidel, or Heretic. Nothing escapes his facillations.
He shakes his head at the creature. When Mr.
McElhonne showed up to the membership. Mr.
McMillan and Mr. Kelly, Mr. Chanter did into the fray. He only wanted to offer some advice to the Minister for Lands. Then Mr. Farrall judicially showed how entirely inconsequent the motion for adjournment was, or any resolution on the matter would be, as he only wanted to get the subject before the committee, and all the information was on the table. Otherwise the House could not pass an opinion upon the subject. Mr. Waddell talked a little

After tea Mr. Garvan picked up the thread of opposition to the beer duty, and carried it on. He called it, among other things, an "unfair, unsound and outrageous principle." He believed the brewers should be paid as fairly as the legislators. While Mr. Garvan talked, the benches were colded, and the brewers were the target of a "dankened system" of legislation. Were not the brewers as good a class of men morally and socially as the merchants? Mr. Garvan concluded that they were, and why, then, should they be singled out to bear the burden of taxation? While Mr. Garvan talked, the benches of the Ministry sat with faltering and aching, occasionally they pulled themselves up to an interjective point, and lived up the heavy arguments of the speaker. There were only four of the Opposition present at a quarter-past 8 o'clock, when Mr. Garvan was in the thick of his protestations. He was not content to argue, flush, and expound in phrase, to prove that the brewers were really having a good time of it. Had not the Treasurer pointed out, in the past, to the stupid legislators that there would be still with the tax on, "enormous differential rates" in favour of the brewer. Mr. Burnham could not understand it. Why should the brewers be favoured? He asked. However, when they came to division at 8.35 a dozen or so protestants did vote against it, while the Ministerials rolled up a big majority. Mr. Gibbs was in good-humour last night, very good-humour! He was as full of interjections as an egg: in fact, he was not inclined on division several times when he was, and lastly reason except counselled him to abstain.

At five minutes to 9 Mr. Haswell, with a seriousness in his manner that fore-shadowed more than the usual result of a long day, rose to move a resolution of grievance was that the local land boards had been entirely ignored by the Minister for Lands and their judgments set aside. With some little heat Mr. Haswell advocated redress. The Minister for Lands was very much taken by surprise. He would not reply at night, he said, and the discussion, if it took place, would be on Monday. He said that the resolutions were given. Mr. Lyle was a little bit cantankerous. He thought that Mr. Garrett ought to deal with the matter at once if he understood the subject, and if he did not he ought to. But Mr. McElhonne was a most as cantankerous as Mr. Lyle, and he would not let that pass. He said that the Minister had followed and found the bill of '84 through whom men who had helped the bill of '84 through whom now opposed it tooth and nail. Mr. McElhonne asked, though, what was the good of having a land board, costing £80,000 a year, if all their appliances were set at naught to the ownership of the Minister for Lands. A very free lance in Mr. McElhonne. No one has him. He simply wants to fight, and it makes no difference who it is—Jew, Greek, Infidel, or Heretic. Nothing escapes his flaccidations. He shakes his whip at the universe. When Mr. McKee asked to be put on the question of Mr. Lyle's amendment, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Chanter, did into the fray. He only wanted to offer some advice to the Minister for Lands. Then Mr. Farrall judiciously showed how entirely inconsequent the motion for adjournment was, or any resolution on the matter would be, and only wanted to get the question on the table. ### THE QUEENSLAND TURF CLUB MEETING.

A good deal of useful work was done at Eagle Farm racecourse this morning. Firstly, the 1000 yards hurdle race by Harry Driscoll, did good solid work. My Lord and Melina arrived to-day and entered. Both are good form. The thrush, a nice-looking colt, was well placed, but the entry was so good that he was bound to fail fair work. Westendorp had the best of Swing and His Worship at the end of a good gallop, but the latter loses particularly well. He was very off his start a few days ago, and will probably be ridden by Colley.

The betting on the Moreton Handicap is 4 to 1 Yabba, to 3 to 1 the Morlet, 7 to 1 Petroni, 8 to 1 Medina, to 30 to 1 others. Yabba has been booked to the double the Moreton Handicap and Cup, at hundred to 1. The following are the entries:—My Lord, Haulea Korot, Luis, Quamboneon, Clearendon. Brisbane Cup, Quamboneon and Careson.

"None" has been most hospitably received, and will view the stud at Ipswich to-morrow.

This left Mr. Malone to kill, which he did, and secured the prize.

On Saturday last Messrs. The birds were strong, and flew well, the shooters having had time to kill them. Mr. S. H. Terry (30) was the first to begin with a very good bird, which he failed to stop. Mr. H. E. Lard was the ninth, and was also killed by Messrs. H. E. Lard (30), G. B. Modini (32) and Sheldon (21), each having accounted for their nine birds. Mr. H. E. Lard was the only one who entered the sweepstakes. Messrs. H. E. Lard and G. B. Modini secured to divide, and to shoot off for the trophy. The fourth round saw the defeat of Mr. Sheldon (21) as well as Mr. H. E. Lard, leaving Mr. Modini to kill with Mr. E. Lard missed his bird, leaving Mr. Modini to kill with Mr. H. E. Lard failed to do, missing an easy pigeon. Bird 6 found did the shooters then kill until the fifteenth, when Mr. H. E. Lard let an easy bird take part in it. Mr. Lard having killed was proclaimed the winner and secured the coveted trophy. The winner, who was in good luck, having killed 10 birds, was Mr. H. E. Lard, and Mr. S. H. Terry (32) with six hits, making his score 20 in four rounds. The runner-up, Mr. G. B. Modini (32) was also good form, his first barrel being very deadly. Accordingly, the trophy was presented to Mr. H. E. Lard and Co., of London and Sydney, 21, optional award, nine birds, two misses retire.

On Saturday last Messrs. Ellington and Co., plate manufacturers, of London and Sydney, presented to the members of the Gun Club a fine Gun Club trophy in the form of a competition, and 20 members took part in it. The birds were strong, and few fell, the shooters having had to work to kill them. Mr. S. H. Terry (23) was the first to shoot a very fine bird, and the trophy was secured at the end of the ninth round as the war was declared between Messrs. H. E. Lord (30), G. H. Modini (32), and H. J. Sheldin (21). The trophy was won by the first named. As Mr. J. Sheldin had not entered for the sweep stake, Messrs. H. E. Lord and G. H. Modini secured the divide, and the trophy was shared between them. Mr. Sheldin (21) failed to take a bird in the twelfth round. Mr. H. E. Lord missed his bird, leaving Mr. Modini to kill with the first shot. Mr. Sheldin (21) failed to shoot a bird, and the bird died the shooters then kill until the fifteenth, when Mr. Modini fell an easy one escape him, and Mr. H. E. Lord secured the coveted trophy. The winner, who was in good form, succeeding in dividing the sweep with Mr. S. H. Terry (23) with six hits, making his score 30 kills or 60 birds. The runner-up, Mr. G. H. Modini (32), was in good form, his first barrel being very deadly. Appended are the scores. Trophy presented by Messrs. The following advertisement was read and approved: "Advertisement to the Gas Company, dated 1st March 1891. The undersigned, who was one from Musser, Catonsville, Md., do hereby proceed further with their scheme for decorating certain streets, in the borough. On receipt of that letter the Mayor and the Council have agreed to the same, and the same was approved. A letter was received from the New Protection Union, complaining of having been charged for the purpose of meeting, and the Council have agreed for the purpose of meeting, and the Council have agreed only charged them 10s. They therefore asked the refund of that amount. The Mayor stated that the refund had been a free-trade one, the charge would have been the same. Alderman stated that the union in question had been asked to refund their money elsewhere, but they refused to do so, and the Council have agreed to receive. Alderman Abigail moved that 20s of the money belonging to Campdown be employed in the same manner as the money of the New Protection Union. There were a large number of unemployed now in Campdown, and this was the way of robbing Peter to pay Paul, as the number of unemployed was increasing. The Mayor stated that he suggested that the arrangement should extend over a month, but on the other hand, Alderman Procter objected to the arrangement being extended, as it would be for introducing cheap labour, and would be for the benefit of the other. The other alderman argued that the opportunity was one that should not be let slip, as most urgent work was to be done, and the Council have agreed to pay 7s. a day. There were some paying rates in the borough who were working at the Victoria Park, and who were sent down to their wives and families with the money they earned. The Mayor said that the Council would allow them to employ that labour he should certainly support the motion. The Council have agreed to the motion, and the Mayor said that a good deal of discussion the motion was carried with a dissent. After the consideration of business at which the business is disposed of, are inclined to think that few people are convinced of that. On the contrary, there is a strong impression on the minds of many at as much could be done in that direction without overburdening the Judges, or diminishing the efficiency of the Court. This impression is not felt only by the uninitiated. Anybody who will turn up the debates upon the Additional Judge Bill of a few years ago, when the late Mr. S. C. Brown was a prominent member, will find that he was vigorous and persistent in his opposition to the enlargement of the Supreme Court Bench while there was room for economizing time by making better arrangements; and similar views are still held by men whose opinions are not to be set aside on the assumption that they are founded on the practical acquaintance with the subject.

But is it absolutely necessary to make work for Supreme Court Judges by the undue multiplication of Circuit Courts? We believe ness necessity for some of them, it is a professional necessity or a political one. There is a remarkable hankering on the part of country towns for the profit attending the holding of Circuit Courts and the honour attaching to the possession of a gaol. It is, perhaps, natural that this consideration should weigh with Governments that have to ask to every vote in the Assembly; but they should be taken at nothing more than their true value by Ministers that are strong enough to consider only the public interest. Country circuits, when there is work enough to warrant the attendance of two or three junior barristers, provide openings which may not be readily found where there is a greater concentration of business, and even when there is no criminal business at all, they bring to the Judge change parts that are not manifestly required by a regard to the public interest, and depend upon considerations of this sort for even a presentable appearance, are expensive luxuries, and it is not only the money but the men that we should look to. Even though we have six Judges now, we should not think less of more than we have done heretofore. It is scarcely holding them in sufficient esteem to send them running about the country on almost fruitless errands. The doctrine has indeed been propounded that the presence of business at a Circuit Court is one of the best possible proofs of the efficiency of the system. But is that doctrine quite sound? If in one place it is a sign that all the Judges are working well when a Judge makes his seat on the bench, but has nothing to do, what is the inference when the number

We have nothing to say against the appointment of a sixth Judge, and do not dispute its necessity under the circumstances. If the administration of justice has been allowed to drift to difficulties for which there was no other immediate remedy, the remedy that immediately presented itself was the one to be applied. But the future is also to be considered. In a debate on Wednesday last, HON. DE SALIS contended that the bill should be made to provide that after the appointment of a sixth Judge the vacancy occurring on the Bench should be filled up without further legislation. The proposal was ruled to be out of order, but it was not unreasonable. Perhaps by Mr. McKim, when he said that with some alterations we might be able to get the business approved of by six Judges. We certainly ought not to look forward to the appointment of a seventh Judge," but feeling that such a step is already looked forward to in some quarters, measures should be taken without delay to introduce such reforms as would obviate the necessity for years to come of having to deal with that question under the influence of overmastering measure. Meanwhile another question is engaging public attention—Who is the sixth Judge to be? There is an impression in some quarters that the Attorney-General has an ex-officio claim to the appointment. We believe that this is without foundation. There has been a tradition that when the office of Chief Justice fell that tradition here has been to depart from it to tradition or claim to prescriptive right could never be allowed, either in the one case or in the other, to stand in the way of acting upon a simple and straightforward regard to the public interest. Apart from the question of claim, it may be assumed that under existing circumstances there are many reasons why a breach should not be made in the Ministry. It may be too easier to get a new Judge than to get a new Attorney-General. From a paragraph published elsewhere, it will be gathered that the undersigned has been thought of for the additional Judgeship is Mr. M. H. STERN. The prevailing conviction, we believe, is that Mr. M. H. STERN would make a good Judge, and that he ought to be appointed. Mr. STERN is at present doing the work of a

The leading feature of the Windsor railway accident is the failure of a system that is supposed to be perfect. We use the word failure in a modified sense. The book system is as perfect as any system can be, and if it were properly worked would never fail; collisions would be unheard of upon the lines where it was employed. But human fallibility is always to be reckoned with, and in the charge of Mr. and Miss Baron, the wardman and matron. The ceremony of formally opening the hospital will be performed by Dr. H. J. Tarrant on Saturday next.

 A ship, on report, passed Jersey Bay at 8.15 a.m. yesterday, head north.
 The heavy-masted schooner Comet, bound to Melbourne via the men's bay, arrived 1.15 today, head eastward.
 A ship, on report, from the Cape at 2.30 p.m. yesterday, head north. A ship was in the men's bay, bound from New Zealand to Newcastle.
 The P. & O. Company's R.M.S. Orion, with the latest English mails and passengers, arrived at 11 a.m. in company with the Albatross and the Admiral at 7.45 yesterday.
 The Albatross is from New York, the Admiral from the Cape. The Orion is from the Cape, in company with her steamer herald to London.

The steamer Marquette left for Monday afternoon, and its cargo was loaded in the forenoon. It will arrive at New York in about nine days. The afternoon steamer will arrive from Newcastle and Sydney at convenient times for trains, trams, and hotel accommodations.

The Cluna Navigation Company's steamship Tenax left Hongkong on the 14th instant for Port Darwin, Spurr, and Melbourne.

The steamer Hauroto arrived at Wellington from the port at 10 o'clock on Monday, and the steamer Marion at Auckland at 8 a.m. on Tuesday.

The steamer Wakatipu sailed from Wellington for Sydney at 5 p.m. on Monday.

The steamer Manapouri is to call from Auckland for Sydney after-noon.

The steamer Karawana, Captain W. R. Brown, left Adelaide at 2.20 p.m. on the 13th instant, and entered the Tides at 9.45 a.m. on the 17th, berthing at the A. S. N. Company's Wharf. It was for the first time.

Of all the French steamers which have visited this port, it is probable that the M. M. Company's sloopship La Soudaise, which arrived yesterday from Mar-selles, with mails, passengers, and mails, is the most interesting. It is one of the best-built and swiftest sailing vessels that ever sailed. She is a most attractive looking in every part of her hull, and her passenger accommodation is merely to repeat what has been already truthfully uttered regarding all the vessels of the fleet, which come here: but she is an individualist about her, which singles her out from among the rest of her countrymen, in the world.

It could be seen that she hailed from Auckland, and that most of her masts and bulwarks were gone on the starboard side. She bore north."

all detections, and only 45 days elapsed from the day she left Pirmouth Sound till her arrival here yesterday. The engines, which are still under the direction of Mr. J. Meikel, worked smoothly and well throughout, and kept up an average speed without any unusual stoppage, but upon them, the engine room having been fitted with a grand total of 237 passengers for Australia, 42 being in the saloon, 16 in the second saloon, and 176 in the third class and stores. Of these 128 were for this port, 100 for Melbourne, and 28 for Adelaide. Dr. Keith Watt, who had medical supervision of the voyage, was very satisfactory in his opinion of the health; and in the opinion of passengers, they seemed to have entered themselves thoroughly, Captain Dixon and his staff forwarding efforts in that direction to the fullest extent. Mr. H. H. Maddocks is in his old position of parser, and, as usual, acquitted himself to the satisfaction of all, thereby materially contributing to make the voyage the success it was. The Liguria's cargo consisted of 10,700 packages, 667 of which have been landed at Adelaide and 3702 at Melbourne, the remainder, 6391, being for this port.

The mails brought by the Liguria from Australia, which have been distributed as follows:—Adelaide 2; Geraldton 17; Melbourne 101; Tasmania 25; New Zealand 1; Sydney 105; Queensland 66; Noumea 4; The Fleet 4. There were 14 packages by the parcels post, one being for the Government, five for Melbourne, seven for Sydney, and three for Launceston. Captain Dixon received one of the boxes from the Liguria last London at 1.45 p.m. on the 1st inst., arrived at Plymouth at 1.45 p.m. on the following day, and after unpacking 5 bags made and sent passengers proceeded again at 3 p.m. on the same day. Fresh E. winds and fine clear weather prevailed during the day, and the vessel arrived at Naples at 10.30 a.m. on the 6th. The Liguria sailed from Naples at 10.30 p.m. on the 5th, and had fair weather on the 6th.

along to Port Maitland, which was reached at 7:40 a.m. on the 14th. The bankers were re-filled, and the Canadian mail was put on the 15th night, an unimpaired mail was put on the 15th night, and arrived at 6:15 p.m. on the 14th. Five sea bags and some parcels mails were received on board. A pleasant day was had, and the Red Sea, with moderate breeze and fine clear weather. On the 15th, at 8 a.m. the R.M.A. set anchor in the 20th latitude, and at 8:30 p.m. same date the R.M.A. Ormuz was signalled. Light variable winds and light variable weather followed to the 16th, when the R.M.A. was signalled to go to 20° N. on May 4 signalled the yacht Sumner, reporting all well, and having passed a wreck. The Liguria was signalled on the 16th, and the evening of the 16th was a fine day. On the 17th, King George's Sound at 8 a.m. on the 7th, and the 18th.
